Ruth White-Dunne's life and career reflect a deep commitment to education, environmental stewardship, and global citizenship. Born and raised in Bridgehampton, New York, Ruth grew up surrounded by the natural beauty of Long Island's East End, which would later influence her academic and professional pursuits. Ruth's passion for education led her to pursue graduate studies at Auburn University, where she earned a master's degree in education. Ruth's commitment to lifelong learning is evident in her pursuit of multiple certifications: she is a NAUI-certified Scuba Instructor, holds a New York State teaching certificate in elementary education, and is certified to teach Social Studies at the high school level. These qualifications reflect her versatility as an educator and her dedication to sharing knowledge in both traditional classroom settings and experiential learning environments.

Ruth teaches at Pierson Middle/High School in Sag Harbor. As a Social Studies teacher, she has inspired generations of students to think critically about history, government, and global issues. Ruth's teaching style emphasizes inquiry, discussion, and real-world connections, encouraging students to become informed and engaged citizens. Her background in international affairs and environmental science enriches her classroom instruction, allowing her to integrate diverse perspectives and interdisciplinary approaches into her lessons. She also works on her family's oyster farm in North Sea, contributing to sustainable aquaculture and continuing her lifelong commitment to environmental stewardship.

Whether in the classroom, underwater, or on the oyster farm, Ruth exemplifies the values of lifelong learning, environmental responsibility, and global citizenship. Her story serves as an inspiration to students and educators alike, demonstrating that meaningful change begins with curiosity, compassion, and a commitment to making a difference in the world.
